

Week of 11/13/2017 Operations Update

This week high winds gave way to cooler temperatures. Mosquito populations declined below actionable levels so no adulticiding was conducted.

A La Nina is predicted for this winter, so it could be warmer and dryer than average if that weather pattern comes to fruition. It has been a very busy season so hopefully we will get at least a couple months break to do maintenance, training, winter projects and use up some comp time that was accrued during the above average season.
